W. L. Carneal, Jr., supervising architect in charge, stated yesterday that there was no apparent reason why the college should not open in its new quarters in September, 1914. That means that there will be just one more session in the buildings on Grace Street, after which they will be abandoned and the old campus sold. In the sum of $3,-000 as the result of injuries received when as bricklayer at the new Ruegor Hotel he was hit on the head by a plank falling from an upper window, Clement Manning filed suit yesterday in the Law and Equity Court against F. T. Nesbitt & Co., general contractors in charge of the erection of the hotel.
